

Mr. Wilson

ENG3U

November 15th 2013

It was a dark cloudless night with no one around. In minutes the night went from being no sound to hearing a loud "BANG" fired. That was the night before our big game against the Michigan State Warriors. The boy was walking home from Mike's house when they saw a group of boys. They kept walking and the group of boys started walking towards them, they asked them what they wanted and they said "let's fight". Steven yelled at them, "LET'S GO BROTHER". The guy that wanted to fight Steven was the warrior's biggest sniper, Bobby Brown. Bobby Brown was a Canadian boy from Winnipeg, Manitoba. He had been playing hockey since the age of seven and decided to move to the states when he was fifteen to have a better chance of being scouted out and making it to the NHL. The two boys started going at it punches were flying everywhere. Next thing you knew Jake pulled out a hand gun and shot Bobby. All the boys fled like soldiers in war. They left Bobby lying hopeless on the ground to die out alone.

Common Errors

The next morning Mike and Jake walked together to school and when they arrived they had an unexpected surprise. There were three local police cars sitting in front of the school. When they entered the school Jake started to get weary about what he had done last night. Jake was wondering if he was going to play in this weekend rivalry matches against Michigan State. Throughout the day he was trying not to think about what had happened the night before so that he could focus on tonight's game. After school Jake went and saw his coach and asked him what time they had to arrive at the arena for their pre-game.

Later that night Jake arrived at the arena 20 minutes before everyone else that he could, get ready for the game without having to hear about them talking about Bobby being shot. When the rest of the team arrived the first thing they were talking about was the death of Bobby. "Hey did you hear about Bobby being shot?" wondered Mike. Just before the game the coach explained "even though one of our guys was shot we still need to take this game seriously".

The teams both went on the ice for their warm-ups and the rivalry was shown immediately. The biggest grinder on the Boston Spartans was chirping the best player on Michigan Warren Jacobs. Warren was a 6'0" 200 pound sniper. Since the young age of 6 he has been playing hockey and has been the top scorer five times. He was born in Toronto, Canada but went to the states for hockey since he was a top scouted player and wanted to play for bigger teams to get a better chance of becoming an NHL pro one day. The ref blew the whistle which signaled the start of the game. The game was under way and it was a loud place the Michigan State Warriors fans wanted to get behind their team right away before Boston College got the early lead. The first period didn't have any goals but was full of hitting. In the locker room both locker rooms were very nervous not wanting to let the other team score first. In the Boston College locker room Jake was becoming ill because he was still thinking about the death of his arch rival player and he was the one ^{who} killed him. Jake was sitting by himself on the far side of the locker room trying to stay motivated and focused about the game. The second period started and instantly there was a goal by the Boston College eagle out of all people it was Jake that wired a slap shot from the top of the circle. After this happened Jake started to play terribly. The coach started to notice that he wasn't playing at the top of his game and in the second intermission the coach pulled him off to the side and asked ^{worriedly} "is everything ok? You aren't playing as well as you normally do?" Jake replied instantly with "everything is just fine".

Some grammar issues, such as sentence fragments, commas, and punctuation around quotes.

In the third period the coach decided to bench Jake for a couple of shifts to maybe get him more focused on the game. In that time that he was benched Mike scored two goals. Boston College was now leading by two goals on the road which made the atmosphere intense. The first shift that Jake had he got into a fight and lost to the second scariest guy on Michigan Reggie Smith. He was a 6'2" 235 pound kid he was only 17. This kid was already bound to make the NHL as a grinder. That fight by Reggie Smith really got the crowd going and they started to make noise to try and get their team back into the game. The final buzzer ran loudly and the Boston College ~~had been~~ ^{became} only the second team to beat Michigan this season, which was a good thing but Jake couldn't handle this anymore knowing they could ~~of~~ ^{be} won if he hadn't ~~of~~ ^{been} shot their all-star player the night before.

The next day the team ~~had gotten~~ ^{was} interviewed by ~~the~~ ^{7th} Boston newspaper about their big win over the toughest team in the United States Junior Hockey League (UJHL). The whole team was all joyful about the big win except for Jake. When Jake was interviewed about his opening goal he replied that "it was just a goal. It wasn't the reason why we won. It just helped us". After he was interviewed Jake told his coach he had to leave. Jake had many sleepless nights because he kept thinking about why he decided to kill Bobby Brown. Jake thought to himself, "if I didn't pull the trigger maybe we would have lost the game".....

One month later.....The morning of Monday, November 16th will be a day to never forget for Jake. He decided to go to his coach and explain what happened the night of October 16th. When he arrived at his coach ³⁵ office the coach said "you may come in". Jake walked into his office feeling really sick and nervous on how he should say this. His coach started out with, "What do you have to talk to me about?" Jake replied hesitantly with, "the reason why I wasn't playing well was because the night before are big game against Michigan was because the night before there was a boy killed....."what are you trying to say?" Jake nervous erupted with "I KILLED BOBBY BROWN"!!

Coach Rick, confused, asked "you didn't kill him....." The police were called and when they arrived Jake was like,

Why the space?

"I will explain the whole story to you". After explaining the story to the cops they had to break the bad news to him.

"Jake the legal punishment that you will face for you actions for murder will be 3 years in juvenile." At that time he was charged and brought to the local police department immediately.

Jake's dream of becoming an NHL star came to an end all in that one moment

Good story. The action of the hockey game and the emotions of Jake make the story interesting. Your description of the players is good, too.

You need to improve your comma use as it creates disruptions to the reading of the story. These errors should be caught by SpellCheck, or use a peer to help you proofread. Same goes with formatting of many of your quotes.

I like the detail you've included, and the story reflects your love of the game. Work on the grammar and your next story will be stellar.
